

6.170 Project 4

INDIVIDUAL REFLECTION BY DYLAN JOSS

Anji Ren

You were always calm, logical, and level-headed throughout the project process, even in the stressful times before deadlines. If I was feeling pressured or stressed before deadlines, I could always look to you as an example to emulate. You have a special knack for UI/UX design, and this was very much evident in our beautiful frontend. I think you have a tendency to be quiet and somewhat passive, and hesitant to raise issues. But if you have a problem to discuss, putting that out in the open is better than keeping it to yourself.

Lily Seropian

You demonstrated incredible talent throughout the project and I was consistently impressed by the speed and accuracy with which you were able to implement and debug code. You always had your work done on a timely basis and didn't hesitate even to work beyond the tasks you had been allocated. I learned a lot working alongside you and accomplished more than I think I would have working alone. One relatively minor point: don't be afraid to ask others to handle tasks if you feel you have a lot on your plate already. You're not expected to do everything.

Vicky Gong

You exhibited a tireless drive this entire month, and would be working consistently even on Friday and Saturday nights. Whenever we would be nearing the end of design discussions, you would often raise an important point that the rest of us hadn't considered (and ended up being important to discuss). You were patient in answering any questions I might have about various parts of our project. I think you can work on being more detail-oriented e.g. adhering to the coding conventions that we agreed upon, being consistent with naming in your code, etc. Even paying attention to small, seemingly insignificant details like the spelling in your code comments could go a long way toward establishing that detail-oriented mindset.
